Concerning 'Flem's' Death

Following the report sent in last week by those two officials from the northern town who investigated the circumstances in connection with the death of "Flem" Stirling, said report going to show that deceased came to his death by his own hands, a number of "Flem's" intimate friends in Stony Plain District prevailed on Attorney General Brownlee to reopen the case.

This was done, and Dr. Gatway, Coroner for this district, was instructed to hold a post-mortem. It had been arranged to hold the funeral on the 4th, but the body was not allowed to be interred, and Undertaker Gantley brought the remains to Stony where an autopsy was performed. It is said the public were not allowed in, the entrance being barred by an imported policeman. Nothing new was gleaned, as it was already suspected deceased had died from the effects of a bullet wound.

The object of those asking for the re-opening of the case was, not to have an autopsy, but to have a few of the alleged suspicious circumstances surrounding the death and finding of the body cleared up.

This has not been done, as yet.

Why Taxes Are High.

Exclusive of Ministers of the crown there are 185 provincial employees on departmental payrolls at the present time drawing salaries of $2800 and upwards yearly, the total annual remuneration for these officials being $500,100.00. Of this number about 35 officials are drawing $4000 and up to $7,200 yearly. Eighty employees are on the roll for $3000 to $4000.

Stony Plain Town Council.

Stony Plain Town Council held its regular meeting on Thursday last, April 5, with the Mayor, and all the Councillors present but one.

A letter from F. E. Stanley regarding drilling a well for the town was ordered laid on the table.

The matter of selling used sidewalk timber was up, and the Building Committee was given power to deal with this.

An inquiry having been made regarding the bylaw with respect to cattle running at large, elicited the information that the bylaw from the local Pound-Committee had been forwarded a second time to the Minister of Agriculture, and same is still in the hands of the Department. Five months have gone by since the Department cancelled the old bylaw, and nothing has yet been issued to replace it. The Domestic Animals Act was under discussion in the House some three weeks ago.

A letter from the Bickle outfit at Woodstock, Ont., was read with reference to the furnishing of the fire-extinguishing outfit ordered on trial by the Council some few weeks ago.

A notice was served on the Council, from a Provincial Sanitary Inspector re the tie posts on the town streets, and a time was stated in which these should be removed. The Secretary was instructed to reply to this, pointing out the reasons for inability to comply with the conditions within the time stated.

After several minor matters had been attended to, Council adjourned.

tax ranges from 6 to 8 per cent. No allowance is made for wives or children. During February the maximum salary for Government officials was 2,000,000,000 rubles monthly, or about $62, which was received by Lenin, Trotsky and other important officials.

New Serum Discoveries

Three of Latest Announced by Institute at Copenhagen

The Danish Serum Institute at Copenhagen, which, under the leadership of Dr. Thorvald Madsen, is a centre of European scientific serum investigation, announces three discoveries as the result of its efforts:

1. A completely new method of making diagnosis for syphilis more certain than the Wassermann test.
 2. The manufacture of a better and cheaper serum against diphtheria.
 3. A method which makes it possible to discover whooping cough in its early stages.
- From Paris it is reported that satisfactory results have been obtained by the injection of a serum extracted from the blood of children who are convalescent from measles.
- Professor Mery, who made this statement to the Academy of Medicine, claimed (says Reuters) that two epidemics of measles were checked last year by this method.

Rail Rates In Canada Lower Than In U.S.

Omaha Newspaper Claims American Freight Rates on Wheat Much Higher Than Here

Investigation shows that Canadian railroads are performing the same service for Canadian wheat raisers at just about one-half the figure charged by American railroads, says the Omaha World-Herald. And the Canadian farmers are complaining that they do not get a square deal.

Western American farmers are paying from 50 per cent. to 100 per cent. more to get their wheat to the lakes than the Canadian farmers have to pay, but how? Nobody seems to know.

The three great lake ports for western wheat are Port William for Canadian farmers; Duluth for Northern American farmers; and Chicago for central farmers. All three of these ports are at the head of the lakes. Port William is some 200 miles from Duluth. All three are about equal distance from Buffalo.

Sweetgrass, Montana, on the Great Northern railroad, is about ten miles from Coult, Alberta, on the Canadian Pacific. Sweetgrass is 1,001 miles from Duluth. Coult is 1,200 miles from Fort William. When the American farmer at Sweetgrass ships his wheat to Duluth, 1,001 miles, he pays 43 cents per hundred pounds. When his Canadian neighbor ships his wheat to Port William, 1,200 miles away, he pays 27½ cents. The American rate for the 200-mile shorter haul is 15½ cents greater. And the two farmers may live within sight of each other.

When the Lander, Wyoming, farmer ships his wheat 1,275 miles to Chicago over the Northwestern railroad, he pays 69½ cents per 100 pounds—as compared with the 27½ cents paid by the Canadian farmer at Coult.

Behave Decently Or Perish

Approaching a State, in Which We Could All Live in Harmony

Now that man can do so much more good and so much more harm than ever he could before, so that he is approaching a state in which all mankind could live almost like one respectable family or could annihilate itself by the perdition of its poison gases and its cultured death germs, the piquancy of the old dispute between the ascetics and the humanists increases in like proportion. We are becoming so strong that if we are not good, we shall pull the whole temple down on our heads. We must either behave decently or perish, and the issue cannot be evaded by calling upon science to give us goodness as a kind of by-product of the things that it can and does give us. Wireless telegraphy will go on getting clearer and clearer, but it will never tell us which kind of messages it is honorable to send, and which not.—Manchester Guardian.

In England it is quite a common custom to cut bank of England notes in half and send the two halves by post in separate envelopes. This is done to prevent the risk of loss, and does not impair the value of the notes, which will be honored if joined together.

Borrowed Way to Fortune

Small Loan Bought Partnership Which Netted Fifty Million

Henry Phillips was associated with Andrew Carnegie for fifty years in the steel business. His wealth increased from nothing to $50,000,000. His climb was illustrated by a friend who told of the career of a man who owned a large chicken farm.

"How did you happen to start in the chicken business?" somebody asked him.

"When I was young I was out of work for a spell," he answered. "So I borrowed a hen and a dozen fresh eggs from a neighbor. I fed the hen on worms and all of them hatched. Then I waited until the hen had laid a dozen eggs. I took the hen and the dozen eggs I borrowed back to the owner. He had what I borrowed from him and I had a dozen chickens. The dozen chickens started my farm."

Phillips borrowed 25 cents to advertise for a job. Later he borrowed $500 to enter the partnership which made him rich.

American Newspapers Would Build a Radio Station Near Halifax

Application has been made to the marine department to license the erection of a wireless station at St. Margaret's Bay, near Halifax, by the American Publishers' Committee on Cable and radio-communication.

The New York Times, Tribune, World and Herald, the Chicago Tribune, Philadelphia Public Ledger, International News, and United Press are associated in the enterprise, the application being made by C. F. Grandall, of the British United Press. An experimental plant of moderate power has been operated for a year between London and Halifax, and thence overland to the large American cities. It is now proposed to erect a large station for handling press matter exclusively. There are stations in Britain and on the continent as far east as Moscow.

Canadian Wheats Have Grown In Value And Popularity By Process Of Careful Selection

In a recapitulation of the past 17 years of wheat growing in Canada, P. Russell Cowan, cerealist for the Dominion Government, finds that bearded wheats have supplanted beardless wheats to the result that Canadian wheats have grown in value and popularity.

"Seventeen years ago," he says, "only one hundred million bushels of wheat were produced on the prairies; in 1922 three hundred and sixty-five millions of bushels were produced. Of looking over the history of cereal production in Western Canada, we find that this phenomenal increase was due largely to the successive introductions of various wheats. While Russian was supplemented by Red Fife and Red Fife by Marquis. This, of course, refers only to the main crop wheats. A remarkable feature of this is that all of the above mentioned wheats are beardless or bald.

"During the transitional stage of the supplanting of Red Fife by Marquis, many other varieties of wheat were introduced and tried, but at no time did any of these varieties become popular. Reference is made more particularly to such wheats as Stanley, Percy, Preston and Huron. These wheats did not gain in popularity owing to various reasons, chiefly, though, because of inferiority to Red Fife. Of these wheats, Huron and Preston were bearded varieties and were soon discarded because they were unsuitable for prairie growth and inferior in milling and baking qualities. Stanley and Percy made more headway and are still grown in some localities. It should be noted that these two wheats are beardless.

"Let us now consider the more recent introductions on the Canadian prairie, such as Ruby, Red Bobs, Supreme, Early Triumph, Kitchener, Early Red Fife and Kinley, all of which are beardless. What does this mean. It means that the Canadian west, at the present time, demands a bald wheat.

"There are also numerous bearded wheats, some of which have already been referred to that have been tried in the west with only partial success. Among these may be mentioned Huron, Pioneer, Prelude and Preston. It may be truthfully said of all the above mentioned bearded wheats that they are more subject to shattering than beardless wheats. This is a very important factor to be considered in the prairie where winds are so prevalent. Again, the above mentioned wheats all produce flour of inferior quality and color to such wheats as Red Fife, Marquis, Ruby, or, in other words, most of our bald wheats. This statement must not be interpreted to mean that all bald wheats are superior in quality to all bearded wheats. This is not the case, although it appears from our present knowledge that the best bald wheats produce a higher quality flour than our best bearded wheats.

Great Britain First

Only Nation that Has Decreased National Debt Since the War.

The only bright spot in financial Europe was Great Britain, stated A. B. McMaster, K.C., M.P. for Bromley, Que., in an address before the University Club in Ottawa recently. Britain, went on the speaker, was the only nation that had decreased its national debt since the war.

The easiest way for the laymen to grasp the extent of the indebtedness of Europe to America was to remember that Europe owed every man, woman and child in the United States $140, he continued.

Canada was now also a creditor nation as far as European countries were concerned. Great Britain owed Canada 76 millions; Rumania owed 20 millions on which no interest has ever been paid; Greece seven and a half millions on which only part of the interest was paid, and France almost six million on which all interest was paid.

A Noteworthy Statement

Bovril Limited Reports Good Business In 1922.

The report, submitted at the 26th annual general meeting of shareholders of Bovril Limited, in London, England, last month, was most satisfactory.

A net profit was shown of £395,709—out of which after payment of regular dividends on preferred stocks a dividend of 9 per cent. on deferred shares—free of income tax—was voted.

Mr. George Lawson, Johnson J. Chairman, the Earl of Erroll, Vice-Chairman, and Mr. Douglas Walker, Managing Director, Sir Corbitt-Russon, a former Premier of Western Australia, has recently accepted the position of secretary.

Bovril exports in 1922 exceeded those of 1921 by 22 per cent., and 1922 shows every indication of still further growth.

The increasing amount devoted to various forms of advertising was one of the noteworthy features of the statement—and one to which perhaps much of the increased success of operations was due.

B.C. Fisheries

Fish Curing and Packing Industry Is Showing Good Growth

Reports to hand relative to the fish curing and packing industry of British Columbia show that the pack of dried herring for export to the Orient during 1922-23 exceeds that of any other year, with a practically unlimited demand. A total of 22,000 barrels were shipped through Prince Rupert from American points in Alaska for the United States markets between June and December.

Between 15,000 and 20,000 children are lost in London every year, but nearly 98 per cent. of them are restored to their parents through the aid of the police.

Canadian War Memorial

Expected that St. Julien Monument Will be Unveiled on Dominion Day

The Canadian war memorial at St. Julien will be completed this spring and will most probably be unveiled on Dominion Day, according to an announcement made by Brig.-General H. T. Hughes, chief engineer of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission. Should approval be given by the committee to the St. Julien memorial, work will be commenced immediately in erecting similar memorials at Sanctuary Wood, Passchendaele, Dury Cross Roads, Boulogne Wood, Courcellette, Le Quesnel and Amiens.

Alberta Prize Wheat

Prize Winning Seed Grain to be Used to Advertise Canada

Alberta prize winning seed grain will be used by the Dominion Government to advertise Western Canada abroad during next year. This is as a result of a deal completed between the field crops branch of the Alberta Provincial Department of Agriculture and representatives of the Dominion Department of Immigration and Colonization. Purchases include N. Talenger's prize Marquis wheat from Claresholm, and J. W. Bigland's champion oats from Lacombe.

Country Committed To Pledge For Early Completion Of The Hudson Bay Railway

In the recent debate in the House of Commons on the Hudson Bay route the leaders of all parties committed themselves definitely to the completion of the route. The discussion was on a resolution moved by Mr. Andrew Knox, of Prince Albert, which favored completing the railway and giving the undertaking priority over other transportation projects started later this one. The position of the Progressives is so well known that they need not be quoted here. The other quotations given herewith are from the Hansard report of the speeches by Hon. S. P. Graham, Hon. Arthur Meighen and Hon. W. S. Fielding.

Hon. S. P. Graham, Acting Minister of Railways, speaking for the Government, said in part: "The present situation is this: The Government has no idea of abandoning the Hudson Bay railway, but we have to go carefully and with caution. The position of the second 118 miles at the present time is almost as if it had never been constructed. I believe—and I propose to make this recommendation—that we ought to proceed to put that second 118 miles in such shape that it could be operated, and to rescue some million dollars' worth of material—I do not mean to take it out, but to rescue it—and put into workable shape, that 118 miles of line."

"I think the first duty of the Government to the country is to place that 118 miles in repair again. When that is completed we can decide what the next step will be."

"In the meantime I assure the House that so far as the Government is concerned they have never suggested, so far as I have any knowledge, the abandonment of the Hudson Bay project."

Hon. Arthur Meighen said: "In the first place I favor the Hudson Bay railway. I do not propose to canvass the merits of the undertaking as one would be compelled to do if the whole project were in the future. . . . The matter has been debated and investigated, investigated and debated not for a few years but for many years, for a whole generation. For forty years it has been the subject of dispute, and in that forty years, this country has come to the conclusion in so far as a country can express a conclusion, and come to it more than once and at the hand of both great parties of this country.

"The Senate of Canada has rendered a special service in this connection. Committees of that body have liberated, listened to evidence, listened to professional opinion, have delivered to the very heart of the question on more occasions than one. I think the most thorough inquiry was at the hands of the Senate Committee of 1920. There were those of the Upper House who viewed most pessimistically the feasibility of the navigation of the Hudson Straits and who doubtless sought to bring before that committee the weightiest evidence that could be adduced against the practicability of that transportation route. Notwithstanding this, notwithstanding every effort, after very patient and prolonged inquiry, the Senate Committee reported favorably, and so far as the report shows, it was unanimous on the part of all its members."

"I think the weight of evidence, the weight of the verdict that have been given by competent bodies, is in favor of the route. . . . We are not at the commencement of the venture. We are well on towards the conclusion of the venture. This country is committed to the project. This country has been committed to the project for at least fifteen years. This country has made a contract with many citizens that that road will be built and it is a matter of good faith with that portion of our population that the covenant of the Dominion be kept. . . . It should have priority in my judgment over other national ventures of a major kind. I do not think that good faith will be kept with Western Canada unless that is recognized by this House. . . . Settlers have gone in; large sections are today more populated than they would have been had the word of Parliament not been given in this regard."

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, said:

"Rightly or wrongly, this House under various governments, has consented to the building of the Hudson Bay railway, and the Government of which I was a member began the construction of the railway. I think if one looks at a map of Western Canada it is not difficult to find a reason why the western country should seek an outlet to the nearest and most attractive tidewater. If I lived in the west I should feel that we should have access to that route. Both parties have accepted the responsibility of it, and have done something in the way of building it, and both parties should see to it that it is one of the things we must undertake and in a reasonable time complete. I would hesitate to vote against it, because there is the danger that if one should vote against the resolution it would seem to imply a denial of the commitment of the past. I do not wish to be put in that position. . . .

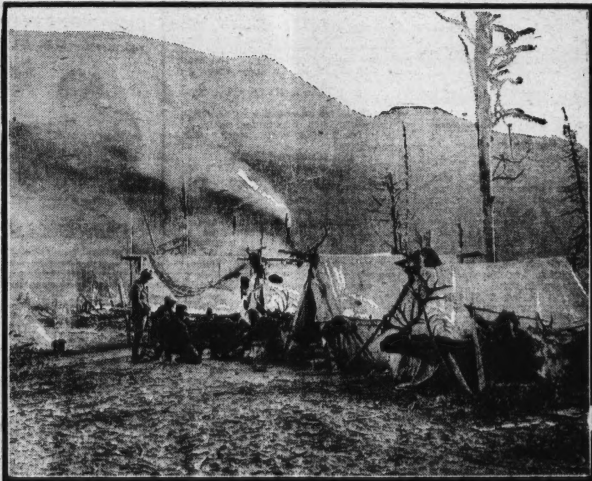

"We must have some regard to the financial condition of the country, and I ask the House to keep that reservation in mind. I am going to support the resolution, because to support the resolution, because to support it would seem to me to be an indication that we were denying responsibility for the Hudson Bay railway. I do not want to deny it. I want to accept it, and the only reservation I make is that which applies to all large enterprises in Canada, namely, that you must have regard to the financial situation of the country."

English Sparrow Invades Alaska

The English sparrow invades Alaska for the first time during the spring of 1922. It arrived in America about the year 1850, and has been gradually but surely working westward ever since. It has already spread over nearly the whole of Europe, and in spite of everything seems likely to make a place for itself all the way round the world.

The proper time to do a thing is when it should be done.

New Hunting Ground In The West

CAMPING IN THE CARIBOO

"Far from the maddening crowd," and in the very heart of the Canadian Pacific Rockies, lies the Cariboo district of British Columbia. Here, as nowhere else on the continent practically, the big game are making one of their last stands against the inroads of civilization. Here in the virgin wilderness the moose and caribou, bear and mountain sheep and goat go their natural way in peace as far as the sportsman is concerned; for so vast is the territory in which they have their being that but very few corners of it have been the scene of man's incursion. The smell of the campfire is a thing of faringing mystery rather than of dread to the wild folk. The mountain lion and the smaller fur bearing animals make a trapper's paradise of the Cariboo district, which is also the shagging country of the west. Rainbow, cut-throat, silver, dolly varden and lake trout are found in abundance, and the smaller streams and lakes contain gamey mountain trout in plenty.

Big game hunters who have discovered the district use Ashcroft, a station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, 202 miles east of Vancouver, as the "going in point." From Ashcroft they make their way by automobile to Harper's Camp (180 miles north), Barkerville, or one of the other hunting centres. The road over which they travel is the one made famous by the gold seekers in '49, and is very good condition the year round. Those who have not established permanent camps are catered to by guide and outfitting companies which provide every needful thing, pack and saddle horses, canoes, camping equipment, in fact everything but rifles and shotguns.

The picture above was taken at E. S. Knight, Ltd., headquarters camp on Quenest Lake last fall, and is typical of the Cariboo camps. From camps such as these one can make short trips to neighboring lakes and streams, returning each night, or one can pack enough stores and equipment to provide for an sojourn in the wilds extending over days or even weeks.

CHAPTER XI.
Tangled Threads.

Relieved though Helen was to some extent, by her father's assurances and by the explanation which she had given, she was far from being in a tranquil frame of mind.

She knew that whatever might be the outcome of the graver charge against Gordon, he would probably have to suffer for his release of Santry, and she found herself wishing more than ever that her lover had never seen the woman, that little bit had contributed to his character was not worth what it had cost already and would cost in the future. Surely, his manhood was alive enough not to have needed the development of such an environment, and if he had been cast in the East, she could have had him always with her. Long letters, which she had recently received from Maxwell Frayne, recounting the gayeties of New York and Washington, made her homesick. Although she could scarcely think of the two men at the same moment, still, as she sat in the crude little hotel, she would have welcomed a little of young Frayne's company for the sake of contrast. She was yearning for the fresh-pots of her own Egypt.

From the news of the fight at the ranch, which had been brought to town by the messenger, she gathered that Wade meant to trench himself on the ranch and defy the law, which would probably embroil him in other criminal acts. Cravling Water, too, was rapidly filling up with armed catmen, who, she thought, would do Gordon's cause more harm than good. Toward afternoon, word came of a bloody skirmish on the Frothingridge range, between a number of his punchers and some of Moran's hired men, and that added to the tension among those crowding the main street. From the parlor windows of the hotel she watched what was going on outside, not without alarm, so high did feeling seem to run. The threats of the ranch men, handed about amongst themselves but loud enough for her to catch a word now and then, made her wonder if the town was really safe for her father, or for herself. A storm was coming up, and the rising wind whipped the flimsy lace curtains of the windows and kept them fluttering like flags. The distant muttering of the thunder and an occasional sharp flash of lightning over on her tired nerves until she could sit still no longer.

For the sake of something to do, she went up to her room, intending to write some letters there, but her bed had not been made up, so she returned to the parlor to wait for her own writing-pad. To Maxwell Frayne she wrote a brief note, which was not likely to cheer him much. She had become so in the habit of taking her mood out on Maxwell that to do so, even with a pen, was second nature to her. She despised him for his tolerance of her tyranny, never realising that he reserved to himself the privilege of squaring their account, if she should ever become his wife.

Then to ease her mind of the strain it bore, she wrote at some length to her mother; not telling the whole truth but enough to cause her own nervousness. She said nothing of the conversation she had overheard, but went fully into the quarrel between her father and Gordon Wade. With a little smile hovering on her lips, she wrote dramatically of the "Sen's" threat to crush the ranchman. "What will please mother," she said to herself, "I've been made to see the paper, 'Gordon felt, you see, that'—she turned a page—'father kept Santry had not killed Jensen, and'—

The hotel keeper poked his head in at the doorway.

"Two ladies to see you, Miss," he announced. "Mrs. Purnell and daughter."

He gave Helen no chance to avoid the visit, for with the obviousness of the plains, he had brought the visitors upstairs with him, and so, blushing what she had written and weighing down her letter against the breeze, she went to greet them.

"This is good of you, Mrs. Purnell, and I am so glad to meet your daughter. I've been lonely and had a lot to say and now you have taken pity on me." Mrs. Purnell shot an "I told you so" glance at Dorothy, which made that young lady smile to herself.

It was sorry not to have been at home, Mrs. Purnell said. "The two girls looked at each other, each carefully veiling hostility. Dorothy, however, had a natural sweetness of disposition, and Helen was the savor of social experience. Each felt that she was a realization of the other's points of advantage. Dorothy saw a perfection of well-groomed poise, such as she could hardly hope to attain, and Helen was impressed with her rival's grace and natural beauty.

"Won't you sit down?" "But aren't we disturbing you?" Mrs. Purnell asked, with a glance toward the writing materials.

"Indeed, you are not. I'm really only too glad to stop because I'm really in no writing mood and I am most anxious to hear what is going on outside. Isn't it dreadful about Mr. Wade?"

"That means his helping Santry," Dorothy asked, with a little touch of pride which did not escape her hosts.

"Partly that; but more because he is sure to be arrested himself. I've been terribly worried."

Dorothy glanced at her keenly and smiled.

"I have an idea that they may find Gordon hard to arrest," she remarked.

"Yes," Mrs. Purnell put in. "He is so regular. Still, I agree with you that there is every cause for anxiety." The good lady did not have a chance every day to agree with the daughter of a United States Senator, and the opportunity was not to be overlooked.

"The people feel so strongly that Santry should never have been arrested that they are not likely to let Gordon be taken just for treating him," Dorothy explained.

Helen shook her head with every indication of frenzied worry.

"But it isn't that alone," she insisted. "He's to be arrested for the Jensen shooting. That was the posse waiting at his ranch after Santry had been caught."

"For the Jensen shooting?" Dorothy showed her amazement very plainly. "Are you sure?" she demanded; and when Helen nodded, exclaimed: "Why, how utterly absurd! I understood that you were with him yourself when he received word of it."

"I was," Helen admitted. "He is supposed only to have planned the crime, I believe. He's supposed to have been the principal, isn't that what they call it?" She appealed to Mrs. Purnell.

"Oh, but do you think he could do a thing like that?" Mrs. Purnell asked, much shocked.

"I don't know. I hope not."

"I do know!" Dorothy burst out emphatically. "I know Gordon Wade too well to think for one minute that he did it; and every true friend of his ought to speak out at once and say the same thing."

The challenge in her voice was unmistakable, and Mrs. Purnell moved uneasily in her chair. She glanced anxiously at Helen and was relieved to see that the latter had lost none of her poise.

"I hope so as fully as you do," Helen said sweetly, "but things move so fast here in these mountains that I find it hard to keep up with them."

"Of course," Mrs. Purnell soothed, with a troubled look at her daughter. "Who swore out the warrant, I wonder?"

der?" Dorothy asked, in a more tranquil tone, a bit ashamed of her outburst. "Was it Mr. Moran?"

"I'm sure I don't know," Helen answered. "I supposed it was the Sheriff."

"Why should Mr. Moran have anything to do with it?"

"Because he seems to have been concerned in all the trouble we have had," Dorothy replied calmly. "This was a peaceful little community until Mr. Moran moved into it."

Helen made no direct reply to this, and for awhile Dorothy allowed her mother to sustain the conversation. She had no doubt but that Moran was back of it all, and so, blushing what she had written and weighing down her letter against the breeze, she went to greet them.

"The whole problem would be at hand," she thought that she had decided a mental note in Helen's voice, and she was wondering why it should have been there.

"But you have answered my question yet about Mr. Moran," Helen presently challenged her. "You seem to have something more in mind than what you said. Would you mind telling me?"

Dorothy looked steadily but not offensively at her.

"Oh, it's nothing, Miss Rexhill. I was only thinking that he has been rather far; been very zealous in your father's interests. Probably . . ."

"Why, Dorothy, is her mother interposed, in a shocked tone. Miss Rexhill asked me, mother, and you know that I always speak frankly."

"Yes, do go on," Helen urged, with even an added touch of interest in her manner. "I really want to know. I am so out of touch with things here, so ill informed."

"Well, you can sit here at the windows and learn all you wish to know. There isn't a man in this town that would see Gordon arrested and not fight to free him. Feeling is running high here now. You know, it's some thing like a violin string. You can stretch it just so far and then it snaps. That's all."

"Dorothy, I'm really mortified that you . . ."

"Oh, you've no occasion to be, Mrs. Purnell," Helen interrupted, smiling. "I asked for the plain truth, you know."

Mrs. Purnell laughed feebly.

Dorothy had known Mr. Wade so long and she liked him so well that she can't bear to hear a word against him," she explained. Her sense of ease balanced was running away with her judgment, and Dorothy shot an irritated glance at her. "Not that I think he did it at all, you understand; but . . ."

"Oh, perfectly," declared Helen.

with rising color and an equal feeling of annoyance. "Oh, dear me, do look at my poor letters as you were then, and as Miss Rexhill says, there is a facial resemblance even yet."

"Perhaps you would like to take it with you, then," Helen suggested, to Mrs. Purnell's delight, who explained that the only picture she had of Dorothy at that age had been lost.

"It wouldn't matter if you had," she said. "You must take it. I have a large blotter in my writing-pad, so I really don't need that lace at all. So many such things are sent to father that we always have more than we can use up."

"Well, now, did you ever?" Mrs. Purnell ejaculated, looking at the lace image of you as you were then, and as Miss Rexhill says, there is a facial resemblance even yet."

"Really?" Helen broken in. "How interesting. I hadn't noticed the picture. Do let me see it."

To be courteous, she agreed with Mrs. Purnell that there was a strong likeness, which Dorothy laughingly denied.

"I guess I know what you looked like when you were five better than you do," Mrs. Purnell declared. "It's the image of you as you were then, and as Miss Rexhill says, there is a facial resemblance even yet."

GLAD SHE DID AS DOCTOR TOLD HER

Took Tania on Physician's Advice and It Put Her in Fine Condition, States Mrs. Coles

"Tania is certainly an ideal medicine," recently said Mrs. Beale Coles, highly esteemed resident of 1851 Lorne St., Regina, Sask.

"I was in such a badly run-down condition that I just felt miserable all the time. My appetite had failed me to such an extent that I was losing weight steadily. My nerves were awfully unstrung; many, many times I couldn't get even an hour's sleep all night long, and I never felt like doing my household work at all."

"A physician advised me to take Tania and I lost no time getting a bottle. Now, I really don't feel like the same person. My nerves have steadied down, I am sleeping like a child, eating heartily, have gained several pounds, and am feeling just fine. Knowing what a wonderful medicine Tania is, I can sincerely recommend it."

Tania is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35-million bottles sold.

Large Production of Gasoline From Well Located Near Okotoks

Quantities of gasoline amounting to between 40 and 55 barrels daily, and the natural gas amounting to between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 cubic feet daily, can be obtained from the Illinois-Alberta well, west of Okotoks, according to the report of S. E. Slipper, Dominion Government petroleum engineer. Mr. Slipper, in his report, states, "the test shows that the well is an important producer of gasoline gas, from which gasoline may be extracted on a commercial scale."

I shall always keep a box of the Nerve Food in the house, and recommend them to my friends; they are a wonderful medicine."

League Of Nations Plan Would Organize World On A Peaceful Basis

New York.—Lord Robert Cecil, in an interview with newspapermen, denied that his trip to the United States was for the purpose of instructing the people of the United States what they should do about joining or not joining the League of Nations.

"I am not an Imperialist interloper in other people's affairs," he asserted. "I thought I had made it clear in my public statements that my object in coming here was to give information about the League of Nations as a first hand observer of a great international experiment. I would be guilty of the gravest impudence if I attempted to instruct the United States people in their own affairs."

"I am presenting the League of Nations as a practical business proposition, and as an organized international effort for peace. I can see no hope for the survival of European civilization unless there is an end of war and some hope of peace in the future."

Lord Robert said he had neither the expectation nor intention of changing the attitude of the United States people toward the League of Nations as expressed by the last election. He pointed out that there was as great a danger for a nation in distrusting everyone as there was in trusting everyone.

While the decisions of the League would be decided by the votes of the members, he said, world public opinion would have the greatest force in influencing the members of the League to give just and impartial decisions.

The entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, while not necessary to the success of the League, he stated, would bring about an organization of the world on a peaceful basis. With the entrance of Russia and Germany, he said, it was expected that all of Europe, Asia and South America would be in the League, with only the United States on the outside.

A short time ago I suffered with heart and nerve trouble, and was so bad I could not sleep, only about two hours each night. My heart was so bad I had spells when driving on the road and would faint away, and neighbors would carry me in from my wagon. I also had spells in the night and during my daily work on the farm. My nerves were so bad I would jump out of bed, and was then compelled to walk the floor before I could settle down again, but after taking a few boxes of

Favors Long Term Loans As A Means Of Helping Farmers Of The West

Montreal.—Believing that conditions detrimentally affecting agriculture in Western Canada could be materially improved by conferences between commercial and agricultural interests, where a frank discussion of present-day problems would be undertaken on a business basis, the Canadian Council of Agriculture has decided to try and revive these meetings which were held many years ago.

This was the statement made by C. Rice-Jones, Vice-President and General Manager of the United Grain Growers Company, Limited, with headquarters in Winnipeg, who visited this city recently.

It goes without saying that these meetings would be shorn of politics, would not tolerate any trivialities, and would forbid anything except a frank and business-like discussion of present-day problems," Mr. Rice-Jones declared. He added that considerable improvement would accrue if the two parties "got together."

Denying that the "farmers want something for nothing," Mr. Rice-Jones favored the idea of long term loans—preferably organized by private enterprise rather than the Government—as a means of helping the farmers, "because agriculture will never be on a satisfactory basis until the farmer can secure loans on long terms in the same manner as a business organization obtains money by selling bonds."

When asked why, according to reports, the Canadian Council of Agriculture intended asking the Dominion Government to defer the revision of the Bank Act, he asserted that the council did not think it possible for the committee examining the proposed changes to assimilate all the evidence and pass judgment properly before prorogation.

Near East Relief

Hindered By Turks

Authorities Say Organization Must Pay Consumption Tax

Constantinople.—The Turkish customs authorities have refused to permit the Near East Relief to continue its efforts of relief to the 25,000 destitute and hungry refugees in Constantinople unless the organization paid the new consumption tax, which is four times as great as the impost duty. It was announced by the Near East relief representatives.

The tax demanded by the Turks totals $45,000, and applies to the relief supplies consisting of rice, sugar, milk and corn grain given by the people of the United States. Protest was made to Adnan Bey and Hikmet Bey, representatives of the Angora Government in Constantinople. The Turkish functionaries, however, declared they were powerless to interfere with the orders from Angora.

Breeders' Day on Saturday

The Second Annual Feeders' Day, conducted by the Animal-Husbandry Dept. of the University of Alberta will be held Saturday next, April 14. The various live stock experiments that have been in progress at the University during the past six months will be completed. The results of these tests will be available and will be the basis for a full discussion of the various problems in connection with feeding of livestock.

In the steer feeding trials 72 steers are being finished, comparing out silage and sunflower silage, out hay and prairie hay, good feeders and fair feeders, and also the economy of gains on calves and 2 yr-olds.

In most cases all the animals used in the above tests will be shown on Feeders' Day, so every visitor will have the opportunity of seeing for themselves the actual results of the various experiments.

The first session will commence Saturday morning at 9:30 at the University Farm buildings.

The Sun Letter Box.

The Editor does not accept responsibility for opinions expressed in this column.

Editor Stony Plain Sun:

DEAR SIR: I wish that you would agitate in the columns of your paper for a better system of postal facilities for this town; a letter I posted in Stony on Good Friday which did not get in to Edmonton paper until April the 5th, taking six days for a trip of only 22 miles. It seems as though there should be something done to speed up our system of communication with the City.

Yours, D. M.

The Big White Rooster.

The Auctioneer had disposed of a quantity of junk which is the prelude of every well conducted sale, and had retired to the henry with the crowd of would-be purchasers. The lot to be offered composed some four or five score assorted fowl which usually assembles in a chicken zoo. The Bid-getter explained the explained the highest bidder could take as many as he (or her) wished, and had succeeded in getting the bid up to six-bits, at which figure the bidding closed. The Auctioneer then asked the successful bidder how many she wished, and was painfully surprised when the answer came in sweet dulcet tones:

"I'll take one—the big white rooster."

George on the Job.

Those Western farmers who have been operating their farms at a loss for the past few years are having their cases presented to a special Parliamentary Committee in Ottawa this week. Those representing the farmers is a delegation from the Canadian Council of Agriculture—2 from the Saskatchewan Grain Growers; 1 from the U. F. O.; and our own G. B. Bevington, the well-known authority on banking and a director of the U. F. A.

Be Prepared.

A big box social and dance is billed to take place in Stony on the evening of Friday, April 13, under the auspices of the U. F. A. Local. This should be well attended, as it is some time since one of these popular events has taken place locally.
